Truk Lagoon

The correct name for Truk is actually Chuuk, but it is better known worldwide as Truk Lagoon. Truk is a wreck diver's ultimate destination and suitable for the novice as well as experienced diver. During February 1944, the U.S Navy launched a devastating air raid on the Japanese Imperial Fleet situated inside the sheltered waters of Truk Lagoon. Code named Operation Hailstone, the assault was fifteen times more powerful than the Japanese assault on Pearl Harbour. The lagoon is now the resting place for more than 100 ships, planes and submarines. "S.S. Thorfinn" is a 170 foot steam powered live-aboard vessel accommodating up to 22 guests. The 11 air-conditioned staterooms have queen size beds, private bathroom facilities and a multi system TV/VCR. The vessel offers comfort in the large salon, relaxation in the open-air lounge deck, spa and sun decks, tempting food delights, safety equipment and experienced dive guides. There is a camera and video service centre and a dive gear service centre onboard. Diving is from dive tenders. The tenders carry a maximum of 6-8 divers each to the various wreck sites.
